Cold Herbal Towelette Provides Therapeutic Relief On Hot Days Or After Good Workouts And Long Flights

Here's a really cool travel product to take with you on vacation. And it takes up less room than a pair of socks.

It's called COOL OFF, and it's a cold herbal towelette that not only takes the sweat off the brow from a hot day – or a good workout – but also contains natural ingredients that work their way into the neck, arms or legs for a healing, therapeutic feeling.

This isn't some PR speak, either; Sightseeing Sam applied it after a run on a warm day and just sat back for about a half an hour with a big "ahhh" feeling. Those little towels, which resemble the moist towelettes you get in a good rib joint, are somehow infused with a blend of natural cooling herbs, moisturizing botanicals and oils. Simple, yet soothing.

Those herbs, botanicals and oils are witch hazel, chamomile flower, evening primrose and tee tree oil.

Moments after applying it to your skin, you can actually can feel it tingling the body. It's almost like having a masseuse give you a light massage. I applied it to the back of my neck and it tingled the way it did when I finally got up the nerve to ask my first girl out to the prom.

The applications for COOL OFF are as numerous as its ingredients: After a workout, a run, tennis or other athletic activity, walking around a town while on vacation on a hot day, or after an overseas airplane flight when you've not showered since leaving home several hours earlier and would pay a king's ransom for anything refreshing to apply to your skin.

It will not help sunburn, so for those who overdue it on the beaches, you're out of luck.

COOL OFF can be found at CVS pharmacies nationwide, Valero gas/convenience stations, Winn-Dixie grocery stores in the South, as well as a few other other such outlets, and on Amazon.com.

For more outlets, videos and a look at any events it may be sponsoring (10Ks and marathons seem a natural), visit its website at: www.thequickchill.com/
